RE: K-3 Suspensions

Dear Chair Chamberlain, Chair Davnie, Chair Richardson and Members:

Thank you so much for your commitment to Minnesota's students! We write as the Solutions Not Suspensions Coalition, a coalition of students, families, community members, and organizations committed to changing policies, practices, and mindsets in order to end exclusionary discipline practices that disproportionately impact Black, Indigenous, and students of color (BIPOC) and instead foster positive school climates for all students.

The Solutions Not Suspensions Coalition has been advocating for discipline reforms to address racial disparities for over six years. Yet, racial and disability disparities persist. Black students in Minnesota are suspended or expelled eight times more than white students, Indigenous students are suspended or expelled ten times more than white students, and students with disabilities account for approximately 15% of students but nearly 45% of suspensions. without disabilities.

These disparities exist even for our youngest learners. In the 2018-19 school year – which is the last school year uninterrupted by Covid-19, data from the Minnesota Department of Education shows that, of kindergarten students, the percent of suspensions accounted for by white students was less than one percent. For Black students it was 6.69% — over 8 times as much. And the rate of suspensions for Black students increased from kindergarten — at 6.69%, to 10.5% for 1st grade, 13% for second grade, and nearly 15% for 3rd grade. The rate for suspensions for American Indian/Alaska Native students that year was almost 17%. Meanwhile, the rate for white students hovered right around 1% for all three grades. And young students who have disabilities also experience disparities – while they accounted for only about 13% of students in grades K-3, Kindergartners with disabilities accounted for 30% of suspensions, and that percentage grew to 44% by third grade.

The progression of increased disproportionality in the years from kindergarten to third grade tracks what the research shows about exclusionary discipline for young learners – that discipline when students are young has a lasting impact on the student's success in school. Students who are suspended in the early school years are ten times more likely to drop out of high school, experience academic failure and grade retention, and face incarceration than those who are not.<sup>1</sup> Exclusionary discipline sends the message that a student doesn't belong, which often exacerbates the stress they were experience that led to the behavior challenges in the first place, and it is clear that this can compound over a student's educational career.

It is time for our state to agree that exclusionary discipline is simply not the right tool for behavior challenges in the early grades and to provide grants to support schools and teachers to use other practices. When students present with behavior challenges, it is likely their way of communicating that they're not doing well, that they need help. Many of our schools recognize this and prioritize meeting student needs when they present with behavior challenges. It is time to move away from exclusionary discipline for young students and towards these more effective and age-appropriate approaches. This is important so that students of color and students who have disabilities who are disproportionately impacted by exclusionary discipline can be full participants in their school communities, and important for all students.<sup>2</sup>

We urge you to include a provision in a final education bill that ends or limits the use of suspensions and expulsions for our youngest learners—students in Kindergarten through 3rd grade. This change is essential to ensuring that our youngest learners are in the classroom in such critical years for their learning. We've attached a letter sent previously signed by many other organizations demonstrating the broad support for this change across Minnesota communities.

Thank you so much for your work on behalf of Minnesota's students and for this opportunity to share our views. We are eager to work with you and all stakeholders towards a Minnesota where students get the support they need and don't experience disproportionate uses of discipline based on their race or disability.

Sincerely,

Solutions Not Suspensions Coalition
