Overview

This bill allows a PCA qualified professional to conduct required supervision remotely for PCA recipients with chronic health conditions or severely compromised immune systems.

Personal care assistants provide assistance and support to persons with disabilities, the elderly, and others with special health care needs living independently in the community.

In order for a person to receive PCA services, the services must be:

- medically necessary;
- documented in a written service plan; and
- provided at the recipient's place of residence or other location (not a hospital or health care facility).

In addition, the recipient of PCA services must be able to direct his or her own care or have a responsible party who provides support.

All PCAs must be supervised by a qualified professional. Qualified professionals are required to periodically evaluate the PCA services provided to a recipient.
